Mixed Media Illustrations based on the ever changing world around us.

01: Books and Storytelling

This project was split into two sections, the first brief was to produce a concept of a children's storybook. I chose the concept of a sports day and added a little companion that both helps and challenges Sophie to be her very best self, a message that is delivered with a fun twist.

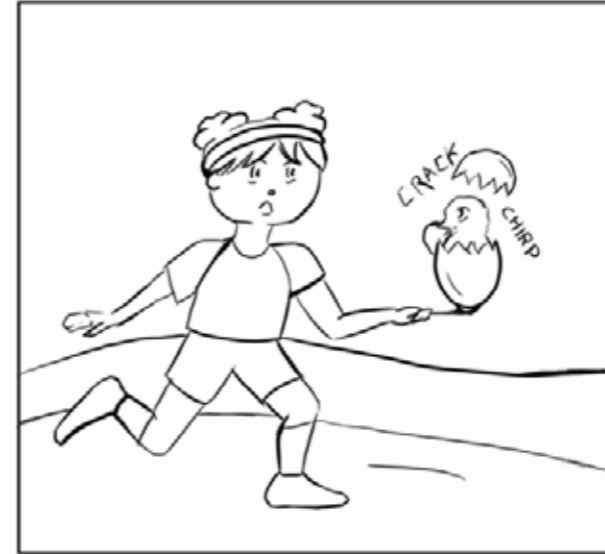

Football

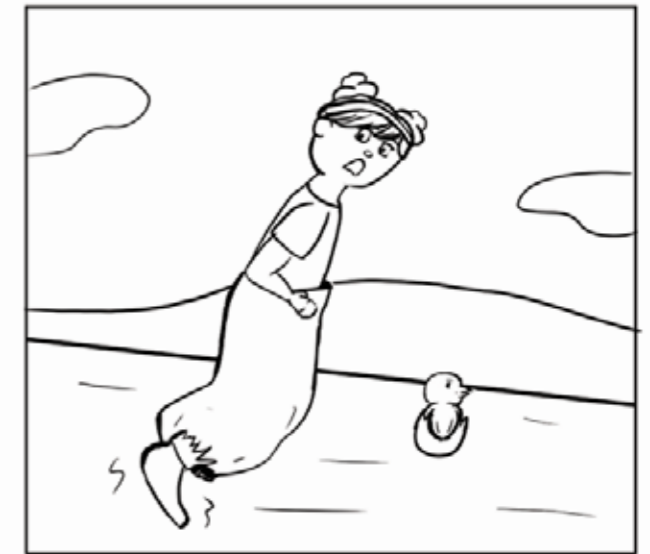

Long Jump

Egg and Spoon Race

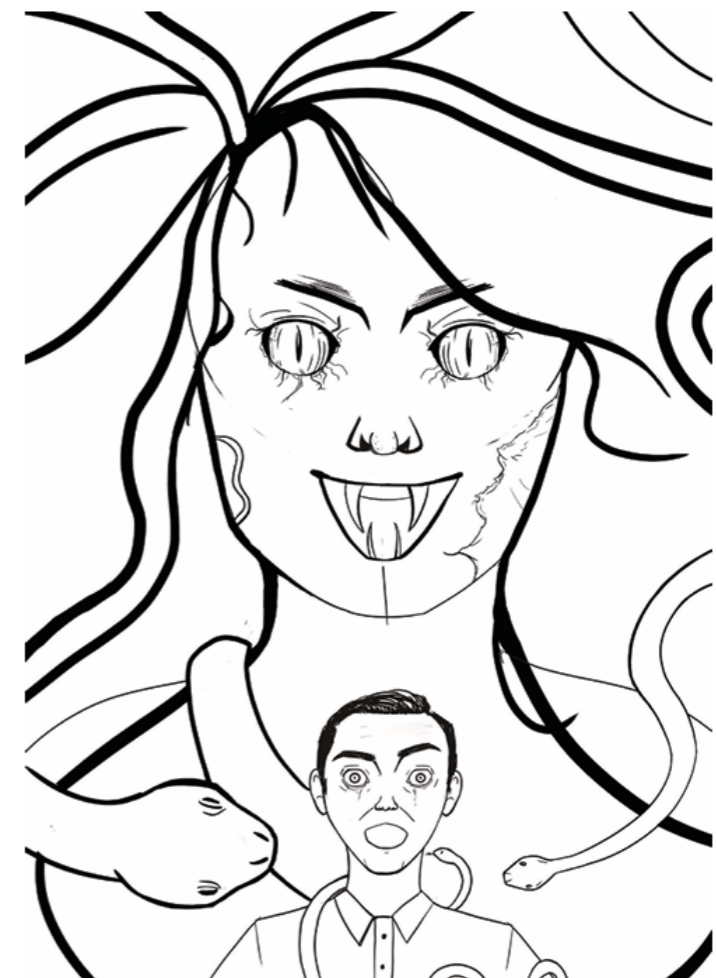

Sack Race

The second part of the brief was to create a graphic novel mini story based on an unsolved case. I chose D.B Cooper so I could explore telling a silent story that was set in the forest. I had to allow for the landscapes to set the time of day and the character facial expressions to set the tone of the interaction between the two characters.

02: Lincoln Castle Project

This brief I was tasked in creating an illustration that could be used as merchandise for the Lincoln castle. This brief I focused on highlighting the two dragons that currently reside on the castle grounds as well as exploring lettering as a main design point. The final illustrations was two posters that can be adapted into merchandise.

03: Ethical Futures

This is the second project of the module titled Contemporary Illustration. I chose to base my project around screentime and how a large part of our society appears to be trapped in the screens, in the digital world. I wanted to highlight this issue by illustrating this idea of someone being physically trapped in a screen with no way out. I also experiment with text in the background because I wanted the illustration to still portray hope that we can turn our screens off and reconnect with the world beyond the screen.

04: Elemental Characters

My personal brief for the negotiated illustration module. This module allowed for complete creative control from start to finish. I chose to explore the concept of nature and the elements associated with the Earth. Through thorough research I created mixed-media posters that raise awareness to the issues our environment deals with on a day to day basis.
